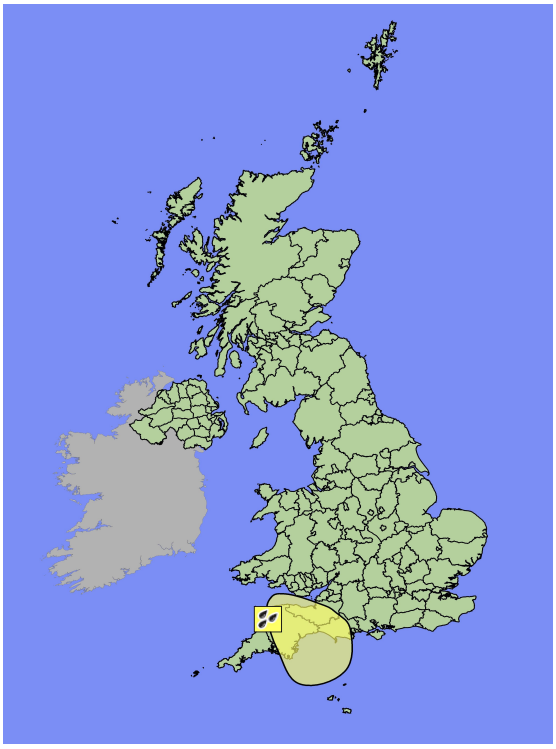
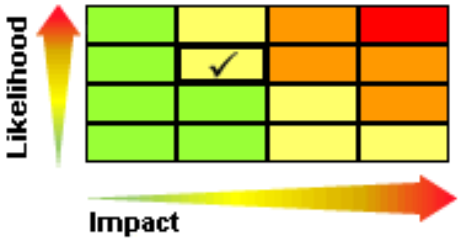
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
The low pressure which brought Sunday's heavy rainfall and strong winds will still be sitting close to southwest England through Sunday night and into Monday. It looks as if another band of quite heavy and persistent rainfall will wrap round into the region during the early hours of Monday, lasting well into the day in places, producing another 15 to 25 mm, perhaps more on high ground. Coming on top of so much rain this past week, this is expected to cause some further problems with localised flooding, and the strong winds are also worthy of note.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 00:00 on Mon, 30th Apr 2012 until 13:00 on Mon, 30th Apr 2012

Further heavy rainfall is likely across parts of southwest England during the first half of Monday, in combination with gusts of wind to around 50 mph in places, perhaps 60 mph on exposed southern coasts.

The public should be aware that this extra rainfall falling on saturated ground, is likely to lead to further problems with local flooding.
